

#littlehumans

Sometimes the littlest people have the biggest stories to tell.

How can we know that for sure? We didn't until we began to ask little children to tell us their own stories and we'd love for you to experience what we did. Inspired by Humans Of New York's wonderful ability to make us relate to people we would never know otherwise, we started our own campaign - #littlehumans. An attempt to provide a space for every little face, a voice for every choice they make, whether it's their favourite food or their worst nightmare.

So we take this opportunity to invite you to be a part of this campaign and bring the voice of children in your town (or the places you travel to within India) to the forefront. All you need to do is interact with children of all ages and backgrounds and send us images + your conversation with the child. We shall edit your conversation to fit the campaign format.

Why are we doing this? We (Leher) are a child rights group who want nothing more than to create a safer/better world for children. Having shifted the tide towards prevention and not just protection, collecting such stories only helps us deepen our understanding of children and their needs, better still through new lenses. Yours. We can only hope that everyone involved will carry on with a new perspective.

Let's limit the gap between adults and children to a height difference.

Leher is a child rights organization working to make child protection a shared responsibility. We envision a society where caring families, alert communities and responsive governments come together to ensure the rights and protection of all children.
